The Living World: Containing Descriptions of the Several Races of Men, and the Different Groups of Animals, Birds, Fishes, Insects, Etc., Etc. With Numerous Anecdotes Illustrative of Their Instincts, Reasoning Powers, and Domestic Habits Augustus C.L. Arnold and Edward A. Samuels

A delightful view of science and faith in the nineteenth century that focuses on the known natural world. The authors describe their work: "The object of this work is not to explore the entire field of Natural History, but only the living, animated world... "Aware that most scientific works are dry uninteresting to the mass of the people, being intended chiefly for scholars...we have endeavored to treat the subject in a manner that will both entertain and instruct at the same time. "In the preparation of this work we have desired to produce a book for the people, and, by its suggestive style, to lead the reader to see the relationship that exists between the wonderful creations of Nature and the awful Beauties of that Unseen Realm, of which all that is glorious and beautiful in the material world is but a feeble reflection." "Nature," says Schlegel, "is a species of Holy Writ in a bodily form, -- a glorious panegyric, as it were, on God's omnipotence, expressed in the most vivid symbols."
