Dead parents and a missing four-year-old girl. Gwen Marcey's latest case brings with it an uncomfortable sense of déjà vu.

Gwen Marcey's first job for the Interagency Major Crimes Unit lands her at the Nez Perce Indian Reservation in North Central Idaho. But the crime is all too familiar: dead parents and a missing four-year-old girl. Over thirty years earlier, Gwen was that missing girl and her own parents were murdered.

Gwen has always refused to speak of her past, but it soon becomes impossible for her to ignore. Especially when a shocking discovery reveals that her parents were not murdered as she'd been told. Instead, they died in a plane crash--and she was supposed to die with them. Why the lies? But Gwen's obsession with her parents and with the missing girl causes her to be removed from the case . . . at least, officially.

As the past and present collide, Gwen longs to finally understand the events that shaped her childhood--if she can just stay alive long enough to uncover the answers.
